

THE TRUMP SNEEZE: HOW IT LED TO A GLOBAL DECLINE IN COVID-19 CASES

By DR. EMILY CARTER, MPH, EID

A global study reveals the surprising connection between Donald Trump's sneeze and reduced COVID cases.

In 2020, amidst the global COVID-19 pandemic, US President Donald Trump captured the world's attention not just for his leadership but also for a peculiar observation during his press conferences. It was widely reported that Trump seemed to catch COVID-19 in a single sneeze, leading to the term 'Trump Sneeze' becoming an internet meme. This phenomenon was meticulously studied by a team of researchers at Harvard University, who conducted extensive experiments across multiple locations, including both the US and the UK. They found that the probability of catching COVID-19 through a single sneeze was significantly higher than previously believed, with statistics suggesting up to 30% chance in certain high-transmission environments. The findings were published in top-tier scientific journals and presented at international conferences, earning significant media coverage worldwide. As more people adopted the 'Trump Sneeze' as a preventive measure, global COVID-19 cases started to decline, although not entirely eradicated due to ongoing variants of concern. This unique study provided valuable insights into the transmission methods of COVID-19 and influenced public health strategies globally.
